Acknowledgements .................................................. 7
Roland Hsu (Stanford University)
Settling Peoples: Lessons from Diasporas and Difference ........ 9

Part One – Migration: Experiencing New Mobility
Zhongshan Yue / Shuzhuo Li (Xi’an Jiaotung University) /
Marcus W. Feldman (Stanford University)
Social Integration of Rural-Urban Migrants: Policy Challenges for China 29

Raimund Haindorfer / Roland Verwiebe / Christoph Reinprecht /
Laura Wiesböck (University of Vienna)
Economic Outcomes and Life Satisfaction of East-West Commuters in the Central European Region ........................................... 49

Part Two – Integration: Models for Trust
Nils Holtug (University of Copenhagen)
Multiculturalism and Social Cohesion .......................... 71

David D. Laitin (Stanford University)
Exodus: Reflections on European Migration Policy ................. 85

Rennie J. Moon (Yonsei University) / Gi-Wook Shin (Stanford University)
Embracing Diversity in Higher Education: Comparing Discourses in the US, Europe, and Asia ................................................ 95
Part Three – Resettlement: Responding Effectively
Alexander Betts (University of Oxford) / Mariano-Florentino Cuéllar (Stanford University) / Aparna Surendra (Stanford University)
Humanitarian Innovation, Integration, and the Architecture of Refugee Protection ......................................................... 111

Sieglinde Rosenberger / Carla Küffner (University of Vienna)
After the Deportation Gap: Non-Removed Persons and their Pathways to Social Rights ............................................... 137

Part Four – Land and Labor: Indigenous and Immigrant Rights
C. Matthew Snipp / Karina Kloos / Dolly Kikon (Stanford University)
Suffering for Territory: Immigrant Claims and Indigenous Rights in the United States and India ........................................... 153

Peter Cirenza (London School of Economics)
Geography and Assimilation: A Case Study of Irish Immigrants in Late Nineteenth Century America ................................. 173

Part Five – Reception and Recognition
Paola Mattei (St Antony’s College, University of Oxford)
Religious Diversity in French Schools: From the 1989 affaires des foulards to the 2004 Headscarf Ban ................................. 203

Claire Lévy-Vroelant
The “Immigrant” through the Prism of Hospitality “à la française” .... 215

Heinz Fassmann (University of Vienna)
Rethinking Migration Policy in Austria ................................................. 229

List of Contributors ................................................................. 243

Index ................................................................. 251
Alexander Betts is Director of the Refugee Studies Centre and Leopold Muller Associate Professor in Refugee and Forced Migration Studies at the University of Oxford, where he is also a Fellow of Green-Templeton College. His research focuses on the international politics of refugees and humanitarianism, with a geographical focus on Africa. His recent publications include Survival Migration: Failed Governance and the Crisis of Displacement (Cornell University Press, 2013) and Implementation in World Politics: How International Norms Change Practice (Oxford University Press, 2014).

Peter Cirenza is Course Tutor and Undergraduate Academic Officer in the Economic History Department at the London School of Economics. His research interests include migration, financial markets and institutions, and business history.

Mariano-Florentino Cuéllar is Justice, Supreme Court of California, and Visiting Professor, Stanford Law School. Justice Cuéllar began serving on the California Supreme Court in January 2015. His previous career was in public service, university administration, and legal academia, with a focus on administrative, criminal, and international law. Cuéllar has written books, chapters, and articles on administrative law, criminal justice, executive and legislative power, public health law, international law, and immigration. His previous publications include: Governing Security (Stanford University Press, 2013); Learning Curves and Collaboration in Reconceiving Refugee Settlements (Forced Migration Review, 2014); and Refugee Security and the Organizational Logic of Legal Mandates (Georgetown Journal of International Law, 2006).

Heinz Fassmann is Full Professor of Applied Geography, Spatial Research and Spatial Planning at the University of Vienna, and Vice Rector for Human Resources Development and International Relations. He is the Managing Director of the Institute of Urban and Regional Research and the Chairmen of the Commission of Migration- and Integration-Research at the Austrian Academy of Sciences. His main fields of research include the linkages between spatial development, the societal change and the influence of the political system. He is specialized in the field of Demography, especially Migration, in Urban Geography and in Spatial Planning. Moreover, he has extensive experience in the spatial impacts of the transformation process in the Central European region. Heinz Fassmann is the author and co-author of more than 280 scientific articles and around 68 books, monographs or project reports. He is member of the Academia Europaea and since 2007 Full Member of the Austrian Academy of Sciences. Publications include Integration Policies at the Local Level: Housing Policies for Migrants. Examples from New York, St. Paul, Antwerp, Vienna and Stuttgart, co-edited with Yvonne Franz (Austrian Academy of Sciences, 2010), Migration and Mobility in Europe. Trends, Patterns and Control; co-edited with Max Haller and David Lane (Edward Elgar, 2009) and Statistic and Reality. Concepts and Measurements of Migration in Europe; co-edited with Ursula Reeger and Wiebke Sievers (Amsterdam University Press, 2009).

Marcus W. Feldman is Wohlford Professor of Biology at Stanford University and External Professor at the Santa Fe Institute. He directs the Morrison Institute for Population and Resource Studies and is Co-Director of Stanford’s Center for Computational, Evolutionary and Human Genomics. He is a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts & Sciences and a member of the U.S. National Academy of Sciences and the American Philosophical Society. Feldman’s specific areas of research include the evolution of complex genetic systems that can undergo both natural selection and recombination, the evolution of modern humans using models for the dynamics of molecular polymorphisms, especially DNA variants, cultural evolution, and the evolution of learning as one interface between modern methods in artificial intelligence and models of biological processes, including communication. He has collaborated for the past 23 years with demographers from Xi’an Jiaotong University on problems of son-preference and rural-urban migration. He is the author of more than 500 scientific papers and ten books on evolution, ecology, mathematical biology, and demography, adding significantly to the greater database over the years. In 2003 his work received the “Paper of the Year” award for biomedical science from The Lancet.

Raimund Haindorfer is a PhD Researcher at the Department of Sociology at the University of Vienna. His research focuses on circular labor mobility, subjective assessments of migration trajectories, life satisfaction and social integration.
Nils Holtug is director of the Centre for Advanced Migration Studies and Professor of Political Philosophy at the University of Copenhagen. His main areas of interest are equality and migration. Publications include: Persons, Interests, and Justice (Oxford University Press, 2010), Egalitarianism. New Essays on the Nature and Value of Equality (Clarendon Press, 2006, co-edited) and Nationalism and Multiculturalism in a World of Immigration (Palgrave Macmillan, 2009, co-edited).

Roland Hsu is Associate Director of the Stanford Humanities Center, and is a Research Affiliate at the Europe Center, at Stanford University’s Freeman Spogli Institute for International Studies. Hsu’s main research areas are post-conflict peace and reconciliation, and migration. His publications combine humanistic and social science methods and materials to answer what displaces peoples, how do societies respond to migration, and what are the experiences of resettlement. His books include the edited Ethnic Europe: Mobility, Identity, and Conflict in a Globalized World (Stanford University Press, 2010), the volume Diaspora: Global Perspectives, co-edited with Dag Blanck (Uppsala University), is in preparation. Hsu continues to foster work on public policy and theory of ethnicity and migration by sponsoring programming on European political and cultural initiatives, and with blog postings on diversity policy and the politics of immigration in such publications as Le Monde Diplomatique. Hsu developed this interest through his teaching and lecturing at Stanford, the University of Chicago, and European universities, and working with scholars, and policy and civil society leaders whom he has helped with faculty partners. Previously he was Assistant Professor at the University of Idaho. He earned his BA from the University of California, Berkeley, and his MA and PhD in art history and history, respectively, from the University of Chicago.

Dolly Kikon is a postdoctoral fellow at the Department of Social Anthropology, Stockholm University. Her ongoing research project focuses on the prospects associated with the expansion of developmental activities by the Indian state in areas that were traditionally associated with economic backwardness and protracted political conflict. Dr Kikon is the author of numerous scholarly journal articles book chapters on the anthropology of South Asia. Her research interests include: anthropology of the state, citizenship, and human rights; the politics of nationalism and territoriality; the social history of violence and militarization; the production of moral and social boundaries; resource conflicts and indigenous movements; food, taboos, and tasty transgressions; the everyday experiences of women and children in armed conflict situation.
Karina Kloos completed her PhD in sociology at Stanford University where she studied global movements and political sociology. Her dissertation features research on the global indigenous rights movement with comparative studies in NE India and Cambodia on indigenous issues. She is Senior Research and Evaluation Specialist at Landesa, a global land rights NGO.

Carla Kuffner is PhD Fellow at the International Research Institute for Cultural Studies in Vienna. Her current research is focusing on the negotiation of deportations.

David D. Laitin is the James T. Watkins IV and Elise V. Watkins Professor of Political Science at Stanford University. He received his BA from Swarthmore College and then served as a Peace Corps volunteer in Somalia and Grenada. He received his PhD in political science from UC Berkeley. He has conducted field research in Somalia, Yorubaland (Nigeria), Catalonia (Spain), Estonia, and France, focusing on issues of language and religion, and how these cultural phenomena link nation to state. He has published papers, in collaboration with James Fearon, on ethnic conflict and civil war, and in collaboration with Alan Krueger, Eli Berman and Jacob Shapiro, on suicide terrorism. His forthcoming book “Why Muslim Integration Fails” (co-authored with Claire Adida and Marie-Anne Valfort) is to be published by Harvard University Press. He has been a recipient of fellowships from the Howard Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation, the Guggenheim Foundation, and the Russell Sage Foundation. He is an elected member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Claire Lévy-Vroelant is professor of Sociology at the University of Paris 8 Saint-Denis (France) and researcher at Centre de recherche sur l’Habitat (CRH-LAVUE of CNRS) where she is part of the Scientific Leading Committee. She also leads the program “Penser la ville contemporaine” at the Maison des sciences de l’homme Paris Nord (MSHPN). Her work intersects the fields of urban, migration, Housing, and more recently memory studies, with a particular attention to long term approaches – due to her background as an historian. More precisely, she deals with questions of housing policies and social issues in a globalizing context. She is member of several international editorial boards (Housing Studies, International Journal of Housing Policy, European Journal of Homelessness, Cidades Comunidades e Territórios), and the director of the collection “Habitat et Sociétés” (L’Harmattan). Recent books publications include Une chambre en ville. Hôtels meublés et garnis à Paris, 1860–1990, with Alain Faure ( Créaphis 2007), Hôtels meublés à Paris. Enquêtes sur une mémoire de l’immigration, with Céline Barrère ( Créaphis, 2012) and Agir sur les vulnérabilités. Les interventions de première ligne entre gestion, expérimentation et travail à la marge, with Michel Joubert and Christoph Reinprecht (Presses Universitaires de Vincennes, 2015).

Shuzhou Li is Changjiang Professor of Population Studies, Director of the Institute for Population and Development Studies, Director of the Center for Population and Social Policy Research, Co-Director of the Center for Aging and Health Research, School of Public Policy and Administration, Xi’an Jiaotong University, and consulting professor at the Morrison Institute for Population and Resource Studies, Stanford University. He received his PhD in System Engineering in 1991 from Xi’an Jiaotong University, China. His research is focused on population and social development as well as public policies in contemporary transitional China, including population policies, aging and old-age support, rural-urban migrants and social integration, gender imbalance and sustainable social development, ecosystem services and human wellbeing. He has published numerous papers and books, and has won many honors and prizes, including the Fudan Management Award in 2011.

Paula Mattei is Associate Professor at the Department of Social Policy, University of Oxford, and Fellow of the European Studies Centre at St Antony’s College, Oxford. Her books include University Adaptation in Difficult Economic Times (OUP, 2014), Public Accountability and Health Care Governance (Palgrave, 2015), Tackling Educational Inequalities (Palgrave, 2015), and Restructuring Welfare Organizations in Europe (Palgrave, 2009). She has published widely on education policy reforms and public governance in the Oxford Review of Education, British Journal of Educational Studies, Public Administration, and other highly ranked peer reviewed journals. She has been Visiting Fellow at Sciences Po, Paris, and at the Department of Political Science, Stanford.

Rennie J. Moon is Assistant Professor at the Underwood International College at Yonsei University in Seoul, Korea. Her research areas include globalization and education, diversity, and higher education in Asia. Her recent and forthcoming journal publications appear in Comparative Education and Comparative Education Review.

Christoph Reinprecht is Professor at the Department of Sociology at University of Vienna and associated researcher at the Centre de Recherche sur l’Habitat in Paris. He is academic director of the post-graduate master in European Studies at the University of Vienna. His research interests focuses on the intersection of migration, urban change and social inequality, and the dynamics of collective memory. Recent publications include Mémoires et migrations en Afrique de Sieglinde Rosenberger is Professor at the Department of Political Science at University of Vienna. Her main research interests are Democracy and Differences, Governing Diversity (including Religion), Political Participation, and Gender Studies. She is head of the research group INEX “The Politics of Inclusion & Exclusion”, University of Vienna (http://inex.univie.ac.at). Recent publications include Com/passionate protests: Fighting the deportation of asylum seekers (Mobilization: An International Quarterly, 2014).

Gi-Wook Shin is Professor of Sociology and Director of the Walter H. Shorenstein Asia-Pacific Research Center at Stanford University. He is the author/editor of 17 books and over 50 articles, including Global Talent: Foreign Skilled Labor as Social Capital (2015), Criminality, Collaboration, and Reconciliation (2014), and New Challenges for Maturing Democracies in Korea and Taiwan (2014). He is currently collaborating on a multi-year research project on “Diversity and Tolerance in Asia” with Rennie J. Moon.

C. Matthew Snipp is the Burnet C. and Mildred Finley Wohlford Professor of Humanities and Sciences in the Department of Sociology at Stanford University. Much of his work focuses on racial and ethnic demography of the United States and of indigenous people in particular. Most recently, he co-edited (with David Grusky and Tim Smeeding) a special issue of The Annals titled “Monitoring Social Mobility”.

Aparna Surendra is a program manager at Stanford University’s Freeman Spogli Institute for International Studies (FSI). Surendra works with FSI’s Policy Implementation Lab, an institute-wide initiative that supports and drives research with policy impact. Surendra’s current research examines innovation and design within refugee communities and the organizations that serve them, and her writing has been published in Forced Migration Review. She earned a BA in English Literature and a Master’s degree in Management Science and Engineering, both from Stanford University.

Roland Verwiebe is Professor of Social Stratification Research and Quantitative Methods at the University of Vienna, and Head of the Department of Sociology.
His areas of research are migration, labor market, social inequality, and life course. Recent publications include European Societies. Mapping Structure and Change, with Steffen Mau (Policy Press, 2010), New Forms of Intra-European Migration, Labour Market Dynamics and Social Inequality in Europe with Laura Wiesböck and Roland Teitzer (Migration Letters, 2014) and The role of education for poverty risks revisited: Couples, employment and profits from work-family policies, with Tobias Troger (Journal of European Social Policy, 2015).

Laura Wiesbock is a PhD researcher at the Department of Sociology at the University of Vienna. Her research interests fall mainly in the field of intra-European mobility, labor market dynamics and social inequality in Europe.

List of Contributors

249